URING THE RECENT SESSION of in Denver there was a good deal of acrimonious discussion of the proposal of President F. J. Hagenbarth to include in the association all the interests concerned in the development of the livestock industry. Under the new constitution which was the basis of the discussion, the packing companies, the railroads and all the associated interests were to have representation in the convention and on the executive committee, which is the chief factor in the affairs of the association. The Texas delegates and some of the Colorado delegates fought this proposition bitterly and finally bolted, because they alleged it was a scheme to give their enemies control of the body.

question would convince any fairminded man that the charge was utterly unfounded. At best the railroads and packers could have only about onetenth of the delegate body, and less ization. They could not possibly have a controlling voice in the association or even affect its action indirectly on matters concerning the controlling to the description of the prefix the controlling voice in the association or even affect its action indirectly on matters.
